

Common Myth about Substance Abuse Treatment “One Size Fits All”

Why Some Substance Abuse Treatment Protocols Can Hurt Your Loved One

Sustainable recovery is critical to the health and wellbeing of addicts and could be the difference between a relapse or even worse.

The type of treatment received for addiction is the single most important contributor to sustainable recovery. It influences who maintains sobriety or succumbs to a relapse which represent one of the greatest risks, and fears to a recovering addict and their family. For this reason, the professionals at Ebb Tide Treatment Centers take a multifaceted approach to addiction treatment. Our methodology encompasses all interconnected issues of life beyond addiction. That means, we explore and address the various aspects that contributed to drug use relative to relapse prevention.

Why you need to avoid certain treatment Programs

Scientists at the National Institute of Drug Abuse (NIDA) suggest the criteria for successfully overcoming addiction demands an integrative treatment process that is also personalized and comprehensive. Yet, many treatment facilities ignore the growing body of new evidence and continue to utilize outdated modalities. Although this typically occurs out of complacency rather than malice, exposure to this type of substance abuse treatment is typically NOT sustainable once discharged and can hurt rather than help your son and often leads to relapse or even worse.

Why We Can Help Your Loved One

Our philosophy is centered in the belief that every individual has a unique and personal blueprint. Sidestepping the one-size-fit-all agenda, our signature treatment approach is steeped in evidence-based protocols. They have been proven to shore up individual strengths and implement behavioral changes that support lasting sobriety. To provide the most holistic remedies possible, we stay on the cutting edge of the evolving science of addiction treatment.

One of the most important aspects of the Ebb Tide Treatment Centers' treatment agenda is the use of multiple clinical modalities. These include Medically Assisted Treatment (MAT), family involvement and a host of social support systems and therapeutic interventions. Unequivocal evidence from the National Institute of Health reveal that MAT coupled with other appropriate therapy reduces illicit drug use, disease rates and related harmful behaviors such as criminal activity. MAT works by blocking the euphoric effects of opioids, for instance, that alleviate physiological cravings and stabilize brain chemistry so that body functions can be normalized. We are treating a chronic brain disease.
